

New Interest Is Awakened In Pretty Separate Blouses

By JULIA BOTTOMLEY

guish this season's blouses, such as bosom fronts or vestees, collarless necklines, emphasizing both the V-neck and the square. Strappings of self-material frequently occur, also bows of self-fabric at the neck. An entirely new trimming is bandings of shirred thin silk or georgette. For dressy effects georgette with lace insets is a theme being elaborated most interestingly. There is every promise for the blouse of sheerest fabric, especially georgette. For these the compe idea is used in most entrancing ways. Sometimes the blouse grades from a deep color at the hem to light at the top, in that several shades of chiffon or georgette are sewed together.

Insets of multi-colored georgette are effectively employed, such as marine blue with gray, scarlet with navy, white with black, and so on. Groupings and borders of shirred georgette, either a contrast or a blend to the material it trims, is one way of detailing the sheer blouse. The very newest idea is the all-over shirred blouse of chiffon. The shirring is done quite closely and forms a puffed effect. With the black ensemble nothing is smarter than the blouse of white satin or white crepe. These may be strictly tailored or elaborately embellished with embroidery, in which beads, tiny spangles and metal threads take part. (Copyright, 1927)
